

Making Training Work

Designing and delivering impactful (online) training

Imagine...

You are a (online) trainer working hard to design and give training sessions that have practical impact on your participants. It can be challenging to engage and motivate your participants to work independently. You want to hear that your participants have gained practical skills that benefit them in their professions immediately.

Are you a trainer or expert who wants to share your experience and teachings? Do you relate to this situation? Then you are very welcome to join the blended learning programme 'Making Training Work'.

At the end of this course with iCRA's master trainers you will have learnt to:

- Identify the needs of your participants before starting a training course.
- Use the "learning staircase method" to design training sessions that focus on practical learning
- Use new and interdisciplinary approaches and tools for designing and delivering experiential and interactive learning programmes
- Ground learning in real life to provide training that goes beyond the walls of the classroom
- Motivate participants
- Make connections and collect learning outcomes
- Give motivating feedback

Course Details:

- Short, intensive face-to-face course involving field visits, networking, workshops and more!
- Online onboarding period with introductory assignments
- Scholarships are available!
- Le cours est également disponible en français!
